Q: find vs binary search vs binary search vs brilliant search Am I correct in assuming that binary search and binary search are the same thing? Which one should I use? Is there a reason to choose one over the other? A: These 2 concepts are very close, but there is a crucial difference between them: Binary search (or binary search algorithm) is when you are looking for a specific value within an array of equal entries. In a lot of languages, arrays are not ordered, so you usually need to iterate through them all and check every entry to find a match. Binary search can be done in one pass,  $O(n)$ , or in two passes,  $O(\log(n))$ . On the other hand, binary search  $O(\log(n))$  can be implemented using dynamic programming (DP) in  $O(n)$  (examples), whereas the original  $O(n)$  implementation is using tree structures and modification of a bucket-list. If you are looking for a value within an array, such as an integer, float, or string, etc., the following definition applies: Binary search If a sorted array is defined (i.e. the difference between the value of one element and the value of the next one is never a constant), you know that you can find this value in  $O(\log(n))$  (if the value is not a constant) or  $O(n)$  (if the value is a constant) using a binary search algorithm. If a binary search algorithm is used, the outcome is that the algorithm will look for the value it is interested in until finding it, then return its location. In the end, the binary search algorithm always returns the smallest index (or the greatest index, in case of a descending search) for which a value satisfying the criteria is found. This is the model that designers chose when implementing binary search algorithms (in general). find find is when you have more than one element of a set of objects, and you want to find one of them, given its parameters. Usually, what is done is to start from the first element and check its parameters and return the first index at which it matches the parameters. This can be done by using a binary search algorithm, or a brute force  $O(n)$  search. When an algorithm has to look for an element it is not given, designers usually implement one that iterates the set and checks assessment was made as of June 2005. There were 83 male and 132 female patients, with an average age of 42.5 years (ranged 24-59). The average hospitalization time was 3.7 days (ranged 2-9). There were no deaths. At an average of 4.6 years after surgery, there were 98 males and 85 females, with an average age of 43.7 years (ranged 24-60). Efficacy was 92.5% (182/195), and efficacy rate in males (98.5%, 83/85) was higher than that in females (91.2%, 99/107) ( $\chi^2 = 4.86$ ,  $P > 0.05$ ). In 2003, the average body weight of patients was 69.75 kg (ranged 53-100), in 2003 the body weight of males (73.95 kg) was higher than that of females (67.34 kg,  $P 0.05$ ). At an average of 5.3 years after surgery, the average body weight was 70.7 kg (ranged 60-110), the average body weight of males was 74.4 kg, the average body weight of females was 65.9 kg, the efficacy rate was 95.0% (
